10:00 - 10:45 CONTACT TRACING APPLICATIONS IN PANDEMIC TIMES: PERSONAL AND BIG DATA Pierre Trudel, Professor, Faculty of Law, Université de Montréal

Contact tracing applications should not impose restrictions on individual freedoms that are not justified by the objective of reducing spread by notifying people who have been in contact with an infected person during the contagion period. The use of these devices must be part of a global strategy to combat the spread of the virus. The current legal framework provided by data protection laws is not suited to the reality of a pandemic. Above all, the deployment of contact tracing applications requires a legal framework for big data recognizing the status of "common" for these resources.

11:15 - 12:00 REIMAGINING PUBLICLY-FUNDED CANADIAN CONTENT

Catalina Briceño, Guest Professor, École des médias, UQÀM

The current pandemic gives us the opportunity to observe the growing appetite for audiovisual content available online, including repertoire content offerings that seem to be multiplying in these times of containment. While the current situation is an opportunity to review our cultural priorities, we could raise the question: Is Canada doing enough to unlock the social and cultural value of the treasure trove of Canadian audiovisual content made possible by government funding? In this thought-provoking presentation, the speaker offers a forward-looking approach to ensuring a valuable and long-term presence for such content in the new environment.

2019 saw landmark legal action addressing piracy, a reverse class action file sharing suit, the first claims for statutory damages against ISPs, a major decision dealing with Crown copyright, site blocking orders and the judicial review on the scope of the 'making available' right. As the cases move forward in the courts and as policymakers grapple with the issues, does Canada have the necessary legal tools or do we need legislative change?
